ANNUAL REPORT
2019-2020

Message from Our Executive Director

Dear Friends,

Lately it seems that we are surrounded by crises. From the global pandemic impacting lives and livelihoods to continuing natural disasters, instability, and violence, we are constantly bombarded by news of the dire and the discouraging. We could choose to ignore these reports, reserving our resources and energies for those most important to us.

But in Isaiah 58:6-7, we are given a different call. As believers, we are to loose the chains of injustice, to set the oppressed free, to break every yoke, to share our food with the hungry, to shelter the poor wanderer, and to clothe the naked. In short, we're called to compassion, to give instead of conserve.

In my time as the Executive Director, I have seen this command answered time and again through your faithful support of ADRA's ministry. Because of you, together we are able to shelter the homeless, set free those oppressed by poverty and need, and share our food with the hungry.

I saw your fulfilment of this command in action on a recent trip to a country in real humanitarian need. After years of political instability and rising inflation, families are no longer able to buy necessities such as food, hygiene supplies, and medicines. On this trip, I met Linda.*

Linda is the mother of six children. Raising her children and providing for them during a political and economic crisis has been heart-wrenching.

It was with many tears that she told me stories of their struggles. Linda recently lost one of her children to dehydration because of the dire conditions they live in. Her surviving children are facing malnutrition as Linda and her husband struggle to provide enough food. Sanitation and health are also a struggle as supplies at the stores are far too expensive for them to afford.

Thanks to your generosity, Linda and families like hers began receiving monthly food baskets. These food baskets not only nourish her family but also free up resources to buy other necessary items. The baskets were distributed by ADRA staff who are incredibly dedicated, despite the long hours they work. Their compassion and love are felt strongly by the community members, who treat them like family. I have been so inspired by their work.

Shelter was another concern for Linda's family. They had no home of their own. They had been given permission to live in a small concrete house with a dirt floor and deteriorated zinc sheeting forming a partial roof. The kitchen and toilet were uncovered. When it rained, the house flooded. They lived with the fear that they could be asked to leave at any time. Using donations from our Shelter fund, a home was purchased for Linda's family. The new house is in the same community where they currently live, so they do not need to leave all that is familiar. It has multiple rooms and a sturdy roof. Linda's family is overwhelmed by the many blessings they have received.

This is made possible because of you. We are so thankful. The people we help are so grateful. In these pages, you will find more stories of how your faithful response to God's command to be compassionate is making a real difference around the world.

With heartfelt gratitude,

Steve Matthews

Australia

“That kindness and compassion and love, just like your ADRA shirts say,” Norma says. “It felt very much heartfelt, very much nurtured. And we felt cared for.”

In 2019, the bushfire season in Australia caught global attention and became known as the Black Summer. Massive wildfires killed at least 34 people and consumed 46 million acres of land. Hundreds of thousands of people were forced to flee to safety, leaving their homes in the path of the blazes.

Vicki and her mother Norma live in Eden, New South Wales.

“We weren’t going to evacuate originally. But when the warning came through that they couldn’t guarantee Eden could be saved, we thought that was too scary for us to deal with.”

They made the decision to evacuate to a shelter in Bega, about 45 minutes away because it accepted pets. Vicki and Norma secured their house as best as they could, packed their valuables and their dog Ted, and made the drive to Bega.

When they arrived at the centre, they found that it was housing over 2,000 people and their pets. That night the temperature reached 43°C.

“It was really hot in the hall and it was a bit scary for Ted and for us too because there were a lot of people there, some very distressed people. We had not much sleep that night,” shares Vicki.

That same night, members of the nearby Bega Seventh-day Adventist Church decided to open their doors as an overflow for the overwhelmed shelter. The church partnered with ADRA and received funding to maintain what turned out to be a relatively large operation.

Vicki and Norma were the first to be welcomed into the air-conditioned church hall.

“Oh, it was wonderful, just so wonderful,” says Vicki. “I remember a volunteer wanting to feed everybody chocolate Bavarian, which was so lovely. Really nurturing and comforting.”

“That kindness and compassion and love, just like your ADRA shirts say,” Norma says. “It felt very much heartfelt, very much nurtured. And we felt cared for.”

In response to the devastating bushfires ADRA, in partnership with local church volunteers, provided food, water, hygiene kits, cleaning materials, steel posts, wire, insulators, generators, and cash.

The survivors of the bushfires experienced God’s love, care, and provision through your generous support. Thank you!

Bahamas

Beginning September 1, 2019, Hurricane Dorian slammed the Bahamas with ferocious 295 kilometre per hour winds, a storm surge of over 20 feet, and over three feet of rainfall. It became the strongest hurricane on record to hit the Bahamas.

Kaila, 11, and her family were at home when the floodwaters began to rise. When their refrigerator began to float away, they decided it was time to seek shelter.

“I was scared,” Kaila admitted. “But everyone was ok. It was two days before we got back to our home. Everything was in the yard. Our clothes, shoes, pans, everything.”

At least 70 people were killed by this violent storm. The water table was flooded by the storm surge, rendering the fresh water supply unsafe for drinking. Schools, which had been within days of beginning the new term, were overwhelmed by the winds and floodwaters.

Kaila, like so many other students, had lost all her new school supplies. Her school was too damaged to re-open immediately.

After such trauma, it is essential for children to feel secure, have a sense of normalcy, and to continue their education. ADRA partnered with schools across the country, including Kaila’s, to provide back-to-school supplies to the children who lost everything in the storm. ADRA also replaced school furniture, such as desks and chairs. These efforts helped several schools to reopen within months of the devastation.

“It was five months before I came back to school. I received a backpack. It was crayons, books, pencil crayons, pencils, erasers, sharpeners, there was a lot of things. I had everything that I needed. It’s been helping me to study and to learn. I got a new desk. It’s comfortable, with lots of room. I was happy to be able to come back to this school and be with my friends.”

Your generous outpouring of support for the survivors of Hurricane Dorian enabled ADRA to meet immediate needs such as shelter, hygiene, beds, and food. ADRA has also partnered with Water Mission to deliver safe, clean water to communities across the islands. Finally, your kindness has helped children like Kaila return to school. Thank you!

“I had everything that I needed. It’s been helping me to study and to learn.”

Canada

ADRA has worked hard to respond to these disasters through teams of volunteers across the country.

ADRA has worked hard to respond to disasters across Canada through teams of volunteers across the country.

In May 2019, snow melt and excessive rain flooded many parts of Ontario and Quebec. Teams of volunteers were deployed across the provinces to respond to the disaster with in-kind donations processing, trauma counselling, and clean up.

Lake Ontario water levels threatened a Clarington, ON, community with another round of damaging floods. The community put out a request for help in preparing sandbags and ADRA staff members, their families, and church members responded.

During the first week of June, a raging forest fire forced the Pikangikum First Nation Community, ON, to evacuate their homes for shelters in Thunder Bay and Sioux Lookout. With support from the Ontario Conference of Seventh-day Adventists, ADRA Canada responded to the needs of the evacuees by deploying teams to the evacuation centres. These teams assisted with evacuee reception and support. The support ranged from transportation assistance, to counseling, to activities with the children.

In early November, an ice jam downriver from the Bearskin Lake First Nation Community, ON, caused the river and surrounding lakes to rapidly flood. After declaring a state of emergency, the community issued an evacuation order for their 360 residents.

ADRA was requested by Bearskin Lake to join the emergency response efforts. ADRA's response was made possible in large part by a partnership with Independent First Nations Alliance (IFNA) and support from Indigenous Services Canada (ISC) Ontario Region.

ADRA responded in collaboration with the Provincial Emergency Operations Centre, federal and non-governmental organizations such as the Red Cross, and other agencies such as IFNA, the Windigo First Nations Council, and the Nishnawbe Aski Nation.

The emergency response team conducted home assessments and visual inspections to check for potential hazards. The team also took care of pets and prepared pet food.

Thank you so much for your support which enables us to meaningfully respond right here at home!

Kenya

Zainab*, the older woman in blue, is from Mandera West, an arid region in northeastern Kenya. This region is not an easy place to live. The people, primarily semi-nomadic shepherds, lurch from drought to drought, enjoying only very brief periods of rain.

ADRA has been working in this region for over seven years. What began as an emergency food relief project to help the drought-affected families has turned into a sustainable livelihoods project. ADRA has been teaching the people how to reclaim their traditional pasturelands that have been damaged from overgrazing and drought. ADRA has also taught them how to grow their own vegetables in kitchen gardens using permaculture techniques suited to the climate. These activities have spurred the people to begin enterprises they never dreamed of running before. From selling excess produce, to storing and selling fodder during dry seasons, to beekeeping and selling honey products, the people are experiencing a resilience they have never before enjoyed.

Zainab is among these people. A neighbour to the ADRA office, she was able to closely observe their work. She was inspired by what they were doing. Zainab learned how to plant her own kitchen garden and never looked back. She now has a large farm where she grows grasses for fodder. By selling this fodder, she is able to earn a substantial income for her family. She even has enough to give away to those most in need.

With her income, Zainab is able to support four university students in Nairobi. One is her son, the other three are relatives and friends. She also takes care of several other children. She has invested in a small kiosk in a nearby town, which is very popular. Zainab has built a hay house in which to store her fodder until the price is right. She also bought and installed a water tank. Without a permanent or predictable source of water, Zainab knew the water tank would be essential for her garden.

She is just one example of the many lives that have been changed in Mandera West. The difference has been especially striking for women, who for the first time are earning their own income, making financial decisions for their families, and claiming their rights as citizens of Kenya.

Thank you so much for your life-changing support!

Mongolia

“ADRA is our teacher, our school, our advisor.”

Asgat’s life has changed in many ways over the last several years. Living in Bayan Ulgii, the westernmost province of Mongolia, life was a struggle. He and his wife worked hard to support their 16-year-old son, and their disabled nine-year-old daughter. Often, there was not enough money to meet their needs.

A few years ago, Asgat joined SEAL, a joint ADRA and Canadian Foodgrains Bank project that promised to teach him how to grow his own vegetables. Living in an extremely arid and harsh environment, he was interested to see what he could learn. Through that project, he now grows enough food to feed his family. The money they save on groceries is now used to purchase other needed items.

Once the SEAL project concluded, ADRA asked Asgat and the other project participants if they wanted to take their gardening skills to the next level. With project SAFE, co-funded by the Canadian Foodgrains Bank, they would form legally-registered cooperatives and begin the business of growing fresh produce on large plots of land.

Asgat is the leader of his cooperative. They have worked hard. In the fields, they prepared the lands and managed the seeds and plants as they grew. They have already enjoyed several harvests. In the cooperative, they have learned many lessons on how to run a successful business.

“ADRA is our teacher, our school, our advisor,” Asgat says.

ADRA helped all the cooperatives to build large root cellars, the first of their kind in Bayan Ulgii. They transport their produce to the cellar where they store it until prices increase.

With his gardening at home and the cooperative, Asgat is now working full-time. His family’s income has increased 15% since the cooperative began, and he believes it will continue to improve. His cooperative has many plans for how to improve and diversify their business so that they can keep operating even during the winter months.

SAFE has concluded but now, thanks to your support, a third project called SAFER is underway. Building on what was begun in SAFE, the cooperatives and their members will continue to grow and strengthen, changing the lives not only of their own families but also of their entire communities. Thank you!

Thailand

Som* recently obtained her Thai citizenship. This completely changed her life. Born in Thailand to Chinese immigrant parents, she was entitled to Thai citizenship. However, her unregistered birth meant she has lived much of her life as a stateless person.

For the stateless living in Thailand, opportunities and resources are very limited. Som worked for half the pay of a citizen. She was not eligible for the healthcare provided to Thai citizens. Travel within the country was problematic. International travel was out of the question.

To obtain the citizenship for which she is eligible, Som and those like her face a daunting task. From applying for a “Late Birth Certificate” to tracking down several birth witnesses who must travel to give oral testimony, the process is complex and demands a great deal of time.

Som had attempted this process several times on her own, without success. The average time to successfully complete the process for someone attempting it on their own is 10 years.

Her village leader heard about an ADRA project that was assisting stateless people in obtaining their citizenship and recommended it to her.

After learning about the project, she volunteered to work in the communities for ADRA. She also began the application process for herself again, this time with ADRA’s help.

After four years, she was finally granted citizenship. Som’s world opened with opportunities for education, travel, and even owning and running her own business.

Many people in her village are also stateless. They believed they could never obtain citizenship because of the complicated bureaucracy.

“I am happy that I could show my village that it can be done and to introduce them to ADRA. I am so happy for ADRA, and not because they helped me, but because they are helping so many people.”

“When people get their citizenship thanks to ADRA, it is helping more than just them. It is helping their families live a better life. People can get a better livelihood. This helps the villages to grow stronger.”

Thank you so much for your life-changing support!

Rwanda

“I am so happy with my new life that I tell every man I know about how to become happy!”

Alfred and his wife live in a very dry region of Rwanda. Alfred confessed that he was a drunkard. He would spend all his income on alcohol, then come home and beat his wife.

“I’m not really sure why I beat her,” he says. “It is something I saw a lot when I was growing up. It was one way the man of the house could show that he was the man of the house, that he was in control.”

Pregnant and afraid of losing her baby to the violence, Alfred’s wife left him to live with her parents. He continued with his drinking until something unexpected happened. Some of his friends in the village had joined the ADRA Men’s Club and began telling him all that they had learned. This club was started by the PROMISE project. The PROMISE project was co-funded by the Government of Canada. Over four years, PROMISE saved the lives of mothers and children through nutrition, sanitation and hygiene, health care support, and educating families and communities on how best to care for some of their most vulnerable members.

Alfred’s friends told him how the ADRA Men’s Club had changed their lives. They had stopped drinking. They no longer beat their wives. They planted and worked in their own kitchen gardens. They cleaned around the house, washed clothes, washed dishes, even cooked meals! “I wondered what had happened to my friends. Had they been bewitched by their wives?” remembered Alfred. They also told him what they had learned about human rights, gender equality, and gender roles.

With their encouragement, Alfred slowly started to change. “I got so much support from the ADRA Men’s Club. I stopped drinking. They helped me buy my own plot of land, build a small house, and plant a garden. They helped me convince my wife that I am a changed man and that it was safe for her to return.

“My friends were right! Life is so much better for me now. My wife came back to me with the new baby and we have fallen in love again. I now respect her as my equal. We now have a vision for a happy future. I now fetch water, collect firewood, sweep, mop, cook, clean, I work in the garden. I have become a champion husband! We have joy in our home!

“I am so happy with my new life that I tell every man I know about how to become happy! We are very thankful for all the things that we have learned from ADRA. This has changed our lives!”

Uganda

Lack of sanitary products is a major barrier to education for many girls around the world. When their menstrual cycle starts, girls either miss school or drop out entirely. Unable to either afford or access menstrual hygiene supplies, girls resort to improvised materials such as scraps of clothing, toilet paper, leaves, or pieces of foam mattresses.

In May 2019, AFRIpads issued a challenge to ADRA. AFRIpads is a social enterprise that specializes in the local manufacture and global supply of reusable sanitary pad kits as a cost-effective menstrual hygiene solution. Their challenge? If ADRA could raise enough money to purchase 200 kits, they would double the amount of kits given to girls in schools in Uganda.

ADRA Canada partnered with ADRA Uganda's executive director advised that there were actually 900 school girls in need of sanitary pad kits. He asked ADRA Canada to try to raise enough funds to purchase kits so that all the girls could remain in school.

When ADRA extended the challenge to you, a supporter who believed that these girls should remain in school generously offered to match every donation dollar for dollar until enough was raised to provide all the schoolgirls with kits.

With your combined efforts, 900 refugee schoolgirls in Uganda received menstrual hygiene kits! Thanks to your care and generosity, more girls will be able to remain in school and have a brighter future. Thank you!

EMBRACE High School Challenge Learning Tour

“It’s just really great to see that Canadians are really doing a great thing around the world, you know, just helping out.”

To engage Canadian youth in the issues of maternal and child health in developing countries, ADRA developed the One Year for Maternal Health High School Challenge. Schools across the country were invited to learn about global maternal and child health issues. Their participation in the Challenge gave them a chance to earn an opportunity to travel to one of the countries where ADRA’s EMBRACE project was working.

The EMBRACE project, funded by the Government of Canada, is a four-year project being implemented in Rwanda, Cambodia, Myanmar, and the Philippines. It aims to save mothers and children from preventable deaths by focusing on nutrition, hygiene and sanitation, access to quality health care, and gender equality issues.

The Challenge consisted of four assignments designed to inform Canadian young people about the difficulties faced by those living in remote regions of our world who lack many of the health services available in Canada. These challenges centered on access to clean water, access to adequate nutritious food, access to quality health care, and information on sexual and reproductive health and human rights.

During the summer of 2019, high school students from Toronto, ON, visited the country of Rwanda. During their 10-day tour, they soaked in the beautiful scenery of the country, learned about the history of Rwanda, the culture of the people, and how the Canadian Government and ADRA through the project of EMBRACE are helping people in remote regions of the country live healthier, happier, more food-secure lives.

Lester, one of the students who went on the trip, said, “EMBRACE, honestly, just seeing them, how they help people and the impact that they have, makes me feel thankful that there are some organizations that do stuff like this for the people that are in need. For me, I think Canada is just a friendly nation, giving out the helping hand. It's just really great to see that Canadians are really doing a great thing around the world, you know, just helping out."

Hannah, another student on the trip, shared, "Everything that ADRA did, from the babies, from the young ones, to the teenagers, to the mothers. Also building relationships inside the home and fixing relationships between husbands and wives. It makes me more proud to be a Canadian, knowing how Canada, they're not selfish with the blessings that are coming in. They are becoming a help to other countries, as well. Because of this High School Challenge, I've developed and learned new skills that I never thought I would be able to do. Once I grow up and I have my own career, I want to be involved in one of the ADRA projects or charity works, helping those developing countries."

Phyllis, the third student on the trip, said, "Teaching them how to garden. Like, it really helped a lot of people and their plants are really growing healthy. Yeah, the Canadian Government is really doing great. They're giving out of love the blessings that they have that other countries don't have."

We're proud of all the students who participated in the One Year for Maternal Health High School Challenge!

"They're giving out of love the blessings that they have that other countries don't have."
